Lee Moon, intercollegiate athletics director, presented the need for a secondary athletics mark to the committee. He indicated that the mark was created to give each team a unique identity that could be used on team practice shirts, gear and non-saleable items. Never meant to be a mark used in the marketplace, the secondary mark was simply a way for the sports to market themselves internally.

The committee discussed the need, the usage and the restrictions on the mark and it passed unanimously.

Several students, under the auspices of Dr. Leslie Kaplan, the associate director of the Honors Program, presented a logo they had developed for the Honors Colloquium. Because it was student developed, student produced and for a student-led project, the committee was highly inclined to allow the logo through the process as it always encourages student creativity and innovation. Several of the graphic designers on the committee had suggestions for tweaks to the logo and the students were highly amenable to them all.

The logo passed with the provision that the students work with one of the graphic designers to ensure the standards of the University were met.

CDRC logo was tabled.

No new business.
